Public Health Emergency Preparedness

The Preparedness Program staff work in conjunction with the state health department, local health departments and other partner agencies (fire, police, hospitals), to create emergency response plans for infectious disease outbreaks (influenza, West Nile virus, SARS, smallpox, etc.), natural disasters (earthquakes, floods, tornados), bioterrorism attacks, and other emergencies affecting public health.

The Davis County Health Department manages the Davis County Medical Reserve Corps (MRC). Log onto utahresponds.org to sign up as a volunteer to help with county emergency preparedness efforts. Once part of the state registry of volunteers you will be invited to attend a new member orientation and will receive training related to county plans, communication channels, and deployment procedures.

Infectious Disease Program

Utah law requires that certain human diseases be reported to local health departments. Reporting comes from laboratories, physicians, clinics, and sometimes citizens.

Public health nurses make contact with infected individuals to conduct an interview/investigation to determine possible sources of infection, ensure that proper treatment has been given, and identify others who may have been exposed. A disease investigation can involve one individual or many, as in an outbreak.

Disease reports from healthcare providers should be telephoned to the Davis County Health Department disease reporting line: (801) 525-5220. The disease reporting line is available 24/7.

For a list of reportable diseases visit:
